

- Figure 1-1: The hereditary information in the fertilized egg cell determines the nature of the whole multicellular organism that will develop from it.
- Figure 1-2: DNA and its building blocks.
- Figure 1-3: The copying of genetic information by DNA replication.
- Figure 1-4: From DNA to protein.
- Figure 1-5: Life as an autocatalytic process.
- Figure 1-6: Behavior of phospholipid molecules in water.
- Figure 1-7: How membrane protrusion is driven by a simple Brownian ratchet.
- Figure 1-8: The small bacterium Mycoplasma genitalium.
- Figure 1-9: A global tree of life, based on genome comparisons, shows the three major divisions (domains) of the living world.
- Figure 1-10: Shapes and sizes of some bacteria.
- Figure 1-11: Bacterial structure.
- Figure 1-12: Photosynthetic bacteria.
- Figure 1-13: The bacterium Beggiatoa.
- Figure 1-14: The distribution of living biomass on Earth.
- Figure 1-15: The geology of a hot hydrothermal vent in the ocean floor.
- Figure 1-16: Organisms living at a depth of 2500 meters near a vent in the ocean floor.
- Figure 1-17: Genetic information conserved since the days of the last universal common ancestor of all living things.
- Figure 1-18: Four modes of genetic innovation and their effects on the DNA sequence of an organism.
- Figure 1-19: Families of evolutionarily related genes in the genome of Bacillus subtilis.
- Figure 1-20: Two types of gene homology based on different evolutionary pathways.
- Figure 1-21: The major features of eukaryotic cells.
- Figure 1-22: Phagocytosis.
- Figure 1-23: Endocytosis and exocytosis across the plasma membrane.
- Figure 1-24: Membrane-enclosed organelles are distributed throughout the eukaryotic cell cytoplasm.
- Figure 1-25: A mitochondrion.
- Figure 1-26: A scanning electron micrograph of an Asgard archaeon in culture.
- Figure 1-27: A possible model for some early steps in eukaryotic cell evolution.
- Figure 1-28: Chloroplasts.
- Figure 1-29: A model for the evolution of eukaryotic cells in the tree of life.
- Figure 1-30: Genome sizes compared.
- Figure 1-31: Cell types can vary enormously in size and shape.
- Figure 1-32: Genetic control of the program of multicellular development.
- Figure 1-33: An assortment of single-cell eukaryotes.
- Figure 1-34: A single-cell eukaryote that eats other cells.
- Figure 1-35: A eukaryotic tree of life based on genome comparisons.
- Figure 1-36: An alteration in organism shape resulting from a gene mutation.
- Figure 1-37: The T4 bacteriophage.
- Figure 1-38: The genome of E. coli.
- Figure 1-39: The yeast Saccharomyces cerevisiae.
- Figure 1-40: The reproductive cycles of the yeast S. cerevisiae.
- Figure 1-41: Arabidopsis thaliana, the plant chosen as the primary model for studying plant molecular genetics.

- Figure 1-42: Caenorhabditis elegans, the first multicellular organism to have its complete genome sequence determined.
- Figure 1-43: Drosophila melanogaster.
- Figure 1-44: Giant chromosomes from salivary gland cells of Drosophila.
- Figure 1-45: The early stages of normal frog development.
- Figure 1-46: Zebrafish as a model for studies of vertebrate development.
- Figure 1-47: Times of divergence of different vertebrates.
- Figure 1-48: Similar mutations produce the same effect in human and mouse.
- Figure 1-49: The coronavirus.
- Figure 1-50: A very simple gene regulatory circuit.